...but I don't want to.

Shannon Moore

In my Sunday School class, we've been discussing the gospel of John. Over the past couple of weeks, we have been talking about the part where Jesus washed the disciples feet in the middle of the last supper.

I grew up in a church that practiced this ritual as a part of communion—if you took communion, you washed feet; men in one room, women in another. In our tradition, however, the idea of washing feet seems bizarre.

Intrigued by the objections the class raised to the idea of foot-washing, I asked for an explanation. After some debate about cultural differences and other reasons, I think we finally hit the nail on the head when someone said, "...it's just gross. And we don't want to." Bingo.

Serving others usually isn't easy. Yet living a servant life is what we are called to do. When Jesus washed the disciples feet, it made them uncomfortable—and it probably wasn't a picnic for him either. But sometimes we are confronted with a task that needs to be done...and we sometimes we just have to do it.

7 Elements of Our Faith
